

MEDAL GIVEN TO AMUNDSEN AS EXPLORER

for his bravery in carrying an expedition "farthest north."

Among the other speakers of the evening, all of whom spoke along the lines of geographic research or the country's waterways, were Representative Theodore Barton; Harvey D. Goulder, of Cleveland; Representative J. Hampton Moore of Philadelphia and Dr. J. H. McGee, secretary of the Inland Waterways Commission.

William L. Moore, president of the society, presided, and in the absence of Senator Albert J. Beveridge, himself delivered a short toast upon "The American Forests."

Vice President Fairbanks opened his presentation speech by referring to the fact that Captain Amundsen had accomplished the dual feat of discovering the Northwest Passage, and also locating the magnetic North Pole.

The Vice President then paid tribute to the Norsemen as explorers and citizens, and expressed satisfaction that America contained so many of his countrymen.

Captain Amundsen's Reply.

Captain Amundsen replied with a short speech of thanks, saying:

"I am highly and justly proud of the very high distinction the society has conferred upon me in bestowing this gold medal, as I receive it from the hands of the Vice President of this great republic. I am none the less grateful for the honor the society confers in electing me an honorary member. For this token of distinction I would express my deep and sincere gratitude. I am glad to say that I do not have to look far to see one of the most excellent Arctic explorers in the United States—in fact, the most experienced Arctic traveler of them all—Commander Peary. Again I thank you from the bottom of my heart, and wish this society every success in its great work."

Captain Amundsen was followed by Ambassador Jusserand in an earnest and entertaining toast to "The Northmen's Travels," who reviewed the explorations of the French and Norwegians for centuries back.

Bryce Lands Explorers.

He was followed in turn by Ambassador James Bryce, who was assigned "Geography" as a subject. The ambassador professed his liking for the study, in fact said that he had sometimes thought he should have been an explorer rather than becoming interested in politics or history. He said he heartily advocated the course taken by President Roosevelt to conserve the forests and mineral resources of the country.

The other speakers devoted their addresses mainly to the waterways of the United States and the necessity for their improvement as a relief for the present transportation troubles. Representative Burton spoke upon "The Father of Waters," Harvey D. Goulder on "The Five Island Seas," and J. Hampton Moore upon "The Arteries to the Atlantic," reminding his hearers that all the rivers were not in the West. Dr. J. W. McGee delivered an impressive toast to the value of water and waterways to the country at large. The banquet came to a close a few minutes before midnight.
